

INSIGHT Session

Coaching in and out of context

A half-day event exploring what happens when coaching techniques are used in new contexts.

9.00 am - 12.30 pm, 14th July 2010, Nottingham Trent University presented in partnership with Sport Nottinghamshire and Nottingham Trent University

The biggest challenge for developing coaches is finding ways to get out of their personal comfort zone without upsetting the equilibrium of their relationships with the performers they support. Taking their skills into alternative contexts is one way into the learning zone and our speakers will explore the challenges and rewards of working in new ways.

The seminar is aimed at coaches and their managers and mentors who want an insight into how to change context without losing competence - or confidence. We would expect to challenge the thinking of and offer inspiration to self aware coaches operating at UKCC Level 2 and beyond.

Speakers

Trevor Laurence: managing director of the Experiential Training Company of Auckland, New Zealand and a former NZ Olympic hockey captain considers how team sport principles translate to the modern boardroom.

Kay Adkins: SCUUK national trainer Kay Adkins investigates the changes in emphasis needed when coaching coaches and considers how some sports are mistaking the packaging for the product.

Paul Robinson: senior lecturer at the University of Chichester and a coach and coach educator Paul Robinson explores the science of metacognition, a concept which offers an esoteric approach to the learning and re-learning of skills, a challenge faced by many performers as they progress and develop through the performance pathway.

David Haskins: David Haskins, visiting fellow at Sheffield Hallam and John Moores Universities, explores the 5C model and questions whether coaching qualifications help or hinder our quest to give children the perfect coaching and developmental experience.

Hamish Telfer: a national coach in four different sports, an academic and one of our foremost thinkers on coaching and coach education Dr Telfer knows more than most about coaching in a multiplicity of contexts.

The event is running at the same time as the Samsung Hockey Champions Trophy and Men's Four Nations event and we hope delegates will stay all day and watch GB versus Germany and New Zealand versus Japan in the company of our speakers
